A RATHER striking instance of the desperate things the Chinese gambler will do to avoid falling into the hands of the police was seen in a case that came before Mr Wise the other day. There have been cases of gamblers jumping from verandahs to escaps the police and killing themselves by the fall. These were merely results of panic and fronzy, but the case which occurred the other day was one of silent and austained endurance under what n ust have been excruciating agony, all to avoid the possibility of having to pay a fine of five or ten dollars: When Inspector Bremner and a party of police entered a gambling house in Nullah Lane, Wanchai, there was the usual stampede, but in spite of the agility which the gamblers showed two ozen of them were arrested. One men had conceived the idea of hiding himself under the cooking-range. As he squeezed himself into this warm corner a pot of boiling water which had apparently been kept in readiness for making tea, was overturned and a scalding stream flowed down on the hidden man's back. But he hold his peace and lay low. The police rummaged about the place for a good half-hour and still the par-boiled gambler made no sign, At length somebody thought of looking under the stove, probably for concealed cash or gambling gear, and dragged out the miserable wretch. At the Police Court, when Inspector Bromner, showing the man's blistered back, suggested that he had been sufficiently punished, his Worship agreed. So he saved his ten dollars after all and was probably glad, although he will

There is now nothing easier than for a literary gentleman to become a millionaire. The process is quite simple. There are sixty millions of people in America and forty in Great Britain—one hundred millions in all, of whom, say, twenty per cent, are buyers of books. A SHIPMASTER FINED FOR WORKING WITHOUT A PERMIT. At the Police Court to-day, before Mr A. G. Wise, J. W. Stavers, master of the Canton river steamer Pasig, was charged with having contravened the Sunday Cargo-working Ordinance by taking general cargo on board his thip last Sunday without

Angus McAu'ey, P.C., stated that on Sunday last, between 3.30 and 4.30 p.m. he saw cargo being put on board the Pasia. which was lying at her usual wharf. He made inquiries and found that no permit had been taken out for the ship, Mr Wilkinson, who appeared for the defence, said he did not intend putting any questions to the witness, as he did not denv the charge. The defence was that his (Mr Wilkinson) was perfectly well aware of the maxim : ignorantia juris non excusat, but in this case he thought it ought to be at least a mitigating circumstance. For the past two months the newspapers have been full of nothing else but this ordinance and the Shares Bill, and it would be an insult to a man in defendant's position to say that he could be in ignorance of the law. THE FUNERAL OF ADMIRAL

FANG. (From a Correspondent.) The bidy of the late Admiral Fang is lying in state, in the Swatow Guild Hall, where he died, and which has been for a number of years his official residence when

A large number of attendants are on duty and members of the late Admiral's staff are in attendance to receive officials who come daily on visits of ceremony and condolence, according to the custom on such occasions. Officials of all ranks have called, dressed in mourning robes, and performed the ceremonies suitable to the rank and position of their deceased associate.

Complimentary scrolls and banners in great numbers are presented, with inscriptions (usually of four characters) extolling the victues and great deeds of the departed. Not less than a thousand of hese banners have been sent in, and these eras and comprehensive inscriptions exhibit the wonderful capacity of the Chinese language, in this respect. Some of the banners have been presented the Cih and 7th, members of the Consular and Customs Stalls pay visits of ceremony at the house of mourning. The walls of the main hall are covered with the banners, and on the table in the contre are refreshments for visitors. In the adjoining hall are arranged all the paraphernalia of mourning. A portrait of the deceased occupies the central anace by Europeans, officials and others; and on over the dais, and in front of it on a table war candles and consers with burning incense are arranged, according to the usual outtom of ancestral wormpip. On each side ere canopies and curtains of eackeloth, under which the members of the family (male on one side and female on the other) prostrate themselves, in the attitude of worship, and wail. As the visitor enters, the plaintive voices of the mourners tell him that he is in the presence of death.

The coffin is placed in a plant unfornished room just in the rear of the tall of mourning. It is four square, very large and solid and periectly plain, but is said to have cost $1000. The deceration in the hall of mourning is very elaborate, peculiar, and anited of course not fied much pleasure in sitting or lying play suitable to the occasion has b en spared, and the officials of all ranks, and the numerous officers who have servedwith and under the deceased Admiral, have left nothing andone which could shew honor to the man who has so recently been shorn by the unsparing hand of death of the power and influence to which few mor-tala attain. On the 9th inst., the coffin will be conveyed from the Guild Hall, through some of the principal streets of the City, and placed on a steamer at the new Chinese Wharf, and will then be taken to the family residence near Swatow.

FRAGRANT WATERS' MURMUR That it is reassuring to be informed upon high medical authority that no cases of a choleraic type have occurred here re cently. That the system new being adopted of careful observation, as opposed to the harassing imposition of quarantine, beats all the apperance of a success in these waters.

That one cannot help conceding, spite of all the growling at the Sanitary Board, that our general sanitary condition must have improved of late years.

That it cannot be said that the Water and Drainage Department has as yet taken a leading part in the improvement of our sanitary conditions, -as that Department now produces more bad smells than enough; but we live in hope even of that department, after it has finished digging up all the stinking soil of the Colony. That the Colonial Surgeon went humming merrily for about an hour through what he called 'a little explanation at last Sanitary Meeting, and he said much that was sound and to the point. That the question of getting a Hospital to meet the case of an epidemic was not carried much farther by Dr Ayres' explanation.

That the sum of $22,000, agreed upon to be paid by the War Office for the Quarantine Hospital on Stonecutter's Island, may or may not be paid.

That the Hygeic, which it seems takes the place of the Quarantine Hospital only. cost something like sixty thousand dollars; and we are still hunting round for an Epidemic Hospital.

LET US LABOUR ONE AND ALL

(By an English Workman.) Toiling, hoping, suffering brothers, Workmen of my native land, Mark this truth above all others,-Mind must evermore expand Man must wrestle for the blessing, Ever up at Duty a call, Light increasing, life progressing-Let us labour one and all

For the spread of mutual kindness, For the freedom of our class, For the sons we leave behind us, Fettered by our faults, alas ! Still the path of toil pursuing, Truth and Love our guide and goal, Vices vanquished, Hopes renewing -Let us labour one and all !

To obtain a firmer footing On the ground of happiness, Planting Right, and Wrong uprocting, Chasing Discord and Distress; On the world of woman's folly Let the dew of pity full. And to make her pure and holy Let us labour one and ali!

Men must love and trust each other Ere the truth can make them free. Each regarding each as brother, Bound in social unity; By a wise co-operation.

Truth and Freedom let us cherish, Prize them more than priest or king; Then our tree of life will flourish. Labour's heart for gladuess sing! On ourselves be our reliance, Stornly built, a bastion tall, Bidding Fate a proud definice.

- Let us labour one and all!

Skill sits at the helm of Fortune ! Perseverance, his first mate. Backed by Conrago, wins his portion Worth will triumph soon or late! Misery from Misdeed still floweth. Bliss sits thron'd in Virtue's hall Myriads reap what one man soweth-
